Adobe Media Encoder CC 2018.pdfIn the last few years, one of the major legislative priorities of many countries has been to redefine the relationship between innovation and competition. Redefined, I mean separation. Advocates of independent innovation are proposing to maintain the near-monopoly position of large firms, protect them from competition, and rely on them for the innovation that could make their business models obsolete. More significantly, most countries wish to force large companies and governments to subsidize the industry and inventors as a cost of production. In the short term, this is seen as a way to extract value from both the large businesses and the innovators without forcing a revolution in social relations. Short term because the social relations are very hard to change. This approach may begin to
