Update the software. by Bill Berkrot, USA TODAY Sports by Bill Berkrot, USA TODAY Sports Although it ended in a 6-6 tie against the New York Yankees on Sunday, the Atlanta Braves' seven-run ninth inning was more important than it seemed. Backed by a rain-shortened 10th inning, the Braves took advantage of the rain delay with a tie-breaking two-run home run by Michael Bourn in the top of the ninth that sent the game into extra innings. Now with a chance to pick up their seventh victory in the last nine games, the Braves will have to survive a possible 10th inning if the Yankees can somehow pull off a two-run comeback against the Atlanta Braves. With the game tied at 6, Braves closer Craig Kimbrel entered with one out, two on and the bases loaded, and retired the Yankees in order. With the Yankees 1-2-3 in the top of the ninth, Yankees starter Phil Hughes hit a leadoff single and pinch-hitter Adam Dunn walked to put runners on first and second. After a sacrifice bunt from Emilio Bonifacio moved up the runners to third and second, Braves second baseman Dan Uggla brought in Chris Johnson to face left-handed pinch-hitter Brian McCann. Despite having faced Johnson once before as a member of the Oakland Athletics, McCann was able to find a fastball that he deposited over the centerfield fence for a solo homer. The Yankees challenged the call, arguing that McCann never made it to the plate. After a conference between the umpires, McCann was ruled safe as Johnson was tagged out at the plate. The Yankees took a 6-6 tie into extra innings. Game Notes Hughes allowed a season-high seven runs, while RHP Julio Teheran had a strong outing as the Braves improved to 10-9 in extra innings games.Q: Why is my example for a for loop failing?
