Q: What does this usage of the as operator mean? I was reading a C# tutorial on MSDN, and I came across this snippet of code: `List<IstEmployee> = (from employee in this.Employees select` employee.ID).Distinct().ToList()); Here is what I don't understand. In the examples I've seen, most of the as operators are used to cast the value of a variable that is declared as Employee to the type List. Here however, the as operator is used in a different manner. What does it do here? A: The as operator is used to unbox any values. Here, it casts the result of the expression this.Employees to an enumerable list to then perform a distinct on. For example, this: `var list = Enumerable.Range(0, 3).ToList();` Will result in: `var list = new List { 0, 1, 2 };` To see this for yourself: `Console.WriteLine(typeof(List).IsAssignableFrom(this.Employees.GetType()));` A: The `as` operator is used to unbox values. In your example, it's used to "wrap" the result of `this.Employees` in a `List` - ie, the code would be similar to the following: `List list = (new List() { this.Employees }).Distinct().ToList();` In your example, this refers to the class with the code snippet. This object has a property named `Employees`, and by the time the `Distinct()` call is processed, `this.Employees` has the value of the collection which is being enumerated
