What have we found about ergotamine use in migraine? Ergotamine derivatives were established as active components in migraineurs in the early twentieth century. In the past thirty years, prophylactic therapy with ergotamine preparations has been the treatment of choice for those suffering from frequent, debilitating, recurrent migraine attacks. Although a number of high-quality, placebo-controlled studies have evaluated prophylactic treatment, the comparative efficacy of the different ergotamine preparations is unclear, despite the common use of 5 mg or 10 mg doses. Although most studies show a lack of superiority of single-dose regimens when compared with sustained treatment, a few studies have shown that the efficacy and safety of sustained-release and higher single-dose regimens are comparable. Current prophylactic migraine treatments are generally characterized by a relatively poor tolerability profile, and the most common adverse events are palpitations, dyspepsia, nausea, diplopia and paresthesia. However, by adopting a more comprehensive approach to improve patient compliance and tolerability, tolerability, and compliance should be better. In particular, the use of sustained-release ergotamine products and single-dose regimens for treatment of migraine could improve the control of this common disease. Probus was a member of the Eutyllius family, which had distinguished itself for its loyalty to the Roman Empire during the Principate, and had been raised to the patriciate. He was consul in 61, with Gaius Manilius in the place of C. Camillus Scribonianus. He was a member of the Arval Brethren. According to Lucian, Probus was once vacationing at Lake Nemi, where he was called upon by Nero to persuade him to marry. The emperor was unwilling, even though his consort is known to have been Poppaea Sabina, because he was in love with a princess of Bithynia who was called Rabiria. Probus and other familiar friends of Lucan were present at the interview, and it is perhaps to their influence that Nero acceded to Lucan's request and took Rabiria as his third wife. Dio relates that in 68, Probus was cons
